

Title and abstract

Prevalence of condition C among adults attending primary care: a cross-sectional study.

Methods

All adults attending the participating clinics during the study period were eligible.

Analytical methods accounted for the clustered sampling strategy used to recruit clinics.

Results

Condition C was present in 18% of participants.

Discussion

These findings may not generalise beyond primary-care settings.